A TRIBUTE OF RESPECT TO ELIAS HICKS.

Go, thou gospel herald boldly,
Tho' thine enemies oppose,
Former friends may treat thee coldly,
Or be ranked among thy foes.

Thou must suffer persecution la the blest Redeemer's cause, But He'll grant thee resolution To support the weighty cross.

From the mount of God's protection Thou canst look securely down: Goded by thy Lord's direction Bear the sharpest, blackest frown.

Tes, thy master bore deriding, And did not revile again; And may'st thou, on him confiding, Nobly bear the frowns of men.

Som from earth thy Heavenly spirit, To the realms of bliss shall soar, And through thy Redeemer's merit, Lise with him for evermore. There shall none disturb thy pleasure, Nought shall ever there moles has a bliss exceeding measure, Joy exstatic, fill thy breast.

In scribbling geniuses like these We dedicate our verses, We heed not praise or curses.

Of these same Bords we'll hold a few Is all their pride to public view; So lope you'll not the muse condemn, But Lay the folly all to them.

We lately read, with great delight, A piece you published, he aded "Niour," And think the author, like the time That caused his overflow of rhyme, Hat caused his overflow of Thytic, had his dien to every beam Of light, that might have dock'd his theme. And, his his subject, dark and drear, We ne't his doleful verse appear; We ne't his doleful verse appear; We ne't had known, unless b on told, That "Night the labourer would uphold," For, when the hight began b frown, We always thought in thing down.

We see another gentle Bard, Was pressed entirely too hard, And as a subject for his muse, A hanging business he must choose, ladged, whene'er we see in rhyme, Ac dem's exit so sublime Such braish pride as much we pity, As hates the world to read his ditty; He thought it had a harging look.

A word of good and sound advice, We'd give to "Gregory" in a trice, And for a moment let us teach, A precept that you too can preach. How much you write in verse or pr careful, like the best loved beaux, consu e of the fair be heard, A lette flattery to some will do And yet an ocean pleases too.

So leaving this for you to chew, We bed them one and all—adieu. Pet. 1 523.

FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

One of the arguments with which infidelity has armed itself against the Christian religion, is, that its professors do not agree as to its obligations, and that more animosity is prevalent among christians, than ever existed among the heathens .-The christian world, it is true, has long been convulsed by schisms and quarrels, but it is easy to discover that these things are not the offspring of true christianity. which is diametrically opposed to all strife, hatred and variance. Mankind, in the wisdom of this world, have built up various institutions upon the foundation of the gospel; but these have had no other effect than to make religion a source of contention, or to employ it as a pretext to cover worldly and selfish purposes. It was the departure from the plain path of simplicity, and corrupting the plain truth of gospel doctrines, that gave occasion to most of the controversies which have divided christendom-human creeds were substituted instead of plain scripture, and as often as circumstances differed, or new opinions were broached, so these creeds were altered, amended, or corrected, until they became filled with subtletics and contradictions. It is thus that christians have been led away, and scattered upon the barren mountains and desolate hills of an empty profession, by the decisions of councils and synods, whose decrees have had an effect to perplex the consciences of men. At one time opinions were maintained as orthodox, then they have been exploded, perhaps in conformity to the views of secular ambition, and all who do not subscribe to the prevailing orthodoxy, must be heretics of course. Now, if mankind could be brought to repose their faith upon eternal revelation, the scriptures, and reason, there would be no necessity of going to Nice or Constantinople, to Rome or Trent, to consult the decrees of councils and synods; nor to Arius or Athanasius, to Calvin or Arminius, to Fox or Westley, for a rule of faith and practice--By following the dictates of the "light within," all that is necessary for salvation would be clearly made known to us. Our creed would be not in articles, catechisms, or confessions of faith, but in the " law of the spirit of Christ," written in the heart.

" On Eagles' wings immortal scandals fly, While virtuous actions are but born to die

Mankind are generally too prone to the mishievous habit of traducing each other, and no vice, perhaps, has a more general influence than that of baleful slander. It might well be deemed a depravation of the moral faculty, and has been very accurately pourtrayed by the poetic pencil, as -" A lust in man no charm can tame, Loudly to publish his neighbour's shame. Good would it be for the peace and social harmony of society, if a different feeling was more generally cherished, and instead of triumphing over the fall of the unfortunate, we could cast the mantle of charity over the failings of a frail brother or sister of the same blood with ourselves. How eager are we to listen to the whisperings of the foul tongue, poisoned by the breath of defamation, and how ready are some to give currency to the malevolent tale, to waft it abroad as "on eagles' wings."-But the " sirtuous actions" of the pious and benevolent, alas, too often are permitted to "die" unnoticed and unrewarded by the world-actions of humanity, that merit immortal praise, often perish without a herald to proclaim the meritorious deed, or a pen to record t upon the rolls of fame. These reflections have been awakened by the recital of a story, founded on a fact which occurred in this city, not many years since. A worthy and industrious man engaged in mercantile concerns, and highly esteemed for his unimpeachable ategrity, by his unwearied and attentive application to business, subsisted a rising and expensive family, and was gradually occumulating a well carned dependance for the confirst and support of future decining years. The use of presperity shows upon him, and suc-cess attended his footsteps in the path of fortune, but have

" Steeder is man's fies on earthly bliss, It breaks at every breeze."

And instability is the character inscribed by the finger of God on all terrestrial things; Mr. —, became the victim of disease which at length onfined him a prisoner in his character, where he lingered a long time under sufferings indescribable-Embarrasament, as a natural consequence, crept into his affairs, and unfeeling creditors increased the weight of his afflictions, by harrassing exactions of payment, till at length inevitable ruin and destruction stared him in the face. In this distressing dilemma his real situation became known to the phila thropic Mr S-, whose be nevolent and feeling heart often prompts him to visit the chambers of the sick and the afflicted. and here he found a field for the exercise of the ruling passion of his soul, which is to be the inent of good to a fellow creature in misery and distress. Sitting by the bedside he listened while Mr. - related, in broken but pathetic accents, the tale of woe, and the tear that glistened in his eye more radiant than the gem in a monarch's crown, showed the deep sympathy which touched his heart. He immediately interposed his exertions to ameliorate the condition of this distressed family, and by his mediatorial influence, he obtained from Mr. -- 's, ereditors, a relinquishment of their claims I r a long period; himself a considerable ereditor, he generously sacrificed his own interest to the impulse of humanity by canceling the deht altogether.-Actions like this that reflect lustre on the human character. should be unmantled and told before the noon-day un-it should be consigned to immortality by nonumental inscriptions more durable than brass and marble. In concluding-it may not be amiss to observe that Mr -, after a lapse of time, was by the blessing of an overruling Providence, almost miraculously restored to his health. He again entered the busy scenes of active life-fortune smiled upon his laudable efforts and soon he was enabled to extinguish every claim against him, and he is now to every human appearance, advancing to the full tide of wealth and honourable usefulness-a living example of the perfection which fortitude and patience under the pressure of adversity, and upright integrity and perseverance in business will enable a man to attain Dress ever neat; Innate sincerity, Prudence discreet. Sweetness inviolate, Uniform life, Never pedantical, This is the Wife.

Of the first invention of these convenient articles of the toilet, no account seems to have been preserved in history. -The French may, with probability, lay claim to the honour of the invention, for, as long as the 14th century, they were known to that nation, but were considered as articles of luxury; and no pin-maker was permitted, in Paris, to open more than one shop for the sale of them, except at new year. From this it would seem that they were acticles bought for new year's gifts—hence probably, the phrase of pin money, an allowance frequently made to Madam for her spending. In the present mode of making pins, it is said that not less than 20 to 25 bands are successively employed on every pin before it is finished for the toilet. The process after drawing the wire, is to have it cut into lengths sufficient to make six pins eachthese are pointed sharp at both ends, on stones turned by a wheel—this is done by small boys, and so dexterously that it is wire in a close spiral form like suspender springs; it is then cut, every two turns of of the wire forming one head-these, after are distributed among small children, who take up a pin and thrust the blunt end among the heads, and catching one which seldom misses, they strike it with a small hammer moved by a treddle; the head is thus fixed on with a dexterity that autonishes the spectator, and excites a continual ap-prehension for the safety of the nimble the would remain the woul pin has now assumed its wonted form-but them by the friction, so that they become perfectly bright—they are separated from the bran by winnowing like corn: the bran being blown off like chaff leaves the pins fit for use. In order to make them convenient articles of commerce they are stuck in rows into narrow strips of paper, and put up in packs of 12 papers each numbers 31, 4, 41 and 5, are intended 31 Ibs. 4 lbs. &c. to the thousand.

LETTERS FROM SPAIN.

By now 1, DOBLADO.

Spanish Mannere.—About the latter end of May the whole population move down stairs. A thick awning, which draws and undraws by means of ropes and pullies, is stretched over the central square, on a level with the roof of the house.—The window shutters are nearly closed from morning until sonset, admitting just light enough to see one another, provided the eyes have not lately been exposed to the glare of the streets. The floors are washed every morning, that the evaporation of the water imbibed by the bricks may abate the heat of the air. A very light mat, made of a delicate sort of rush, and died a variety of colours, is used instead of a carpet. The Patio or space, is ornamented with flower pots, especially round a jet draw, which in most houses occupies its centre. During the hot season the ladies sit and resemble the laters in its centre. During the hot season the ladies sit and receive their friends in the Patio. The street or four very large glass lamps are hung in a line from the entry door to the opposite end of the P4. the town presents a very pretty and animated scene till near midnight. The poorer class of peoscene till near indingitt. The poorer class of peo-ple to avoid the intolerable least of their habita-tions, pass a great part of the night in conversation at their doors; while persons of all descriptions are moving about till late, either to see their friends or to enjoy the cool air in the public mixture of caution and liberty which appears in the manners of Spain. Most rooms have glass doors; but, when this is not the cause, it would be highly improper for any lady to sit with a ges-tleman, unless the doors are open; yet, when a lady is slightly indisposed in bed, she does not scrupic to receive every one of her male visitors.— A Lady seldom takes a gentleman's arm, and never shakes him by the hand; but on the return of an old acquaintance after a considerable absence, or when they wish joy for some agreeable event, the common salule is an embrace. An unanced wa-man most not be seen along out of doors, nor must she sit tete-a tete with a gentleman, even when the door of the room is open; but is soon as she is married, she may go by hercelf where she pleases, and may sit alone with any man for many bours every day.

The custom of sleeping after dinner, called Sice. ta, is universal in summer, especially in Aidali sia, where the intensoress of the least produc-languor and drowsiness. In wante, 1.4 n. walk, just after rising from table, is very prev Almost every considerable town of Spain is provided with a public walk, where the better classes assemble in the afternoon. These places classes assemble in the atternoon. These places are called Memedas foolar, the common name for the clim and poplar, the trees which shade such places. Large stone benches run in the direction of alleys, where people sit, either to rest themselves, or carry on a long talk, in whisters, which in the idiom of the country, is expressed by the strange phrase, pelar la Para to plock the heaturkey." We have in our Alemeda several fountains of most delicious water. No less than twenty or thirty men with glasses, each hodding nearly a quart, move in every direction, so dexterously clashing two of them in their hands, that without any danger of breaking them, they keep without any danger of breaking them, they keep up a pretty lively tinkling like that of well tuned small bells. So great is the quantity of water which these people sell to the ir quantity of water walk, that the most of them live throughout the year on what they thus earn in the summer. Suc-cess in this trade depends on their preripitade to answer every call, their neatness in washing the glasses, and the most of all, on their skilled use glasses, and the most of all, on their 'folloi use of the good natured waggery peculiar to the lower classes of Andalusia. A knowing air, an arch smile, and some bonied words of praise and endearment, as "My rose, my soul," and many others, which even a modest and high bool lady will hear without the least depleasure, are infallible means of success among trade-men who deal with the public at large, and especially with the more tender nate of them. The commany of these walks presents a notice crowd of efficers in their regiments; of elergymen in their ca-socks, black cloaks, and broad browned buts, not unide those of the coalmen in London; and genth men wrapped up in their capas, or in some uniform, without which a well-born broaderd is atmost ashamed to show himself.

NEW MODE OF RAISING THE WIND.

A well dressed man arrived, a short tim since, at the Talbot Inn, Bristol, (Eng.) by one of the London coaches. He made some inquiries respecting the Exeter coach, by which he said he intended going the fullowing day. He ordered supper and his brandy and water, and went to bed. After breakfast next marning, the waiter gave him his bill, when, to the waiter's asserted one boy will point 16,000 pins in great surprise, he declared he had no mo-an hour! from these pointed ends the ney. The landlord was called, who was length of a pin is cut off by means of a not to be done easily, and he was about wheel—the ends again pointed and cut off sending for an officer, when the gentleman sending for an officer, when the gentleman as before, and so till the wire is worked begged he would not, and offered to leave up. The heads are made by wrapping the some part of his dress. He actually took off his pantaloons and left them for his bill, which was about seven shillings promising to redeem them on his return from being heated in a furnace to soften them, Exeter, as he had no friend in Bristol to whom he could refer. He had a frock coat, and a good pair of drawers, and did not appear to feel the loss of his pantaloans. He went directly from Talbot to ry respecting the western quaches; orderbe supposed, he lived well. On the folpolishing process. ## THE SECRETARY FALCON-

M. Le Vaillant gives an account of a remarkable engagement which he witnessed between a secretary folcon and a serpent. The serpent is the chief enemy of th con in all the countries which it inhabits, and the mode in which it wages war against it is very peculiar. When a faicon approaches a serpent, it always carries the point of one of its wings forward in order to parry off its venomous bites; sometimes it finds an opportunity of spurning and treading upon its antagonist; or else of taking him into its pinio s and throwing him into the air. When by this system if has, at length, wearied out its adversary, and renders him almost senscless, it kills and wallows him at leisure. On the occasion which Vaillant mentions, the battle was obstinate, and conducted with equal address on both sides. The serpent feeling at last his inferiority, endeavored to gain his hole; while the bird apparently guessing his design, stopped him on a sudden, and cut off his retreat by placing herself before him at a single leap. On whatever side the repille endeavored to make his escape, the enemy still appeared before him. Rendered desperate, the serpent resolved on a last He erected himself boldly to intimidate the bird, and bissing drealfully, displayed his menacing throat, inflamed eyes, and head swollen with rage and veom. The falcon seemed intimi tated for a moment, but soon returned to the charges covering her body with one of her wings, as a buckler, she struck her enemy with the boney protuberance of the other. M. Vaillant saw the expent at last stagger and fall; the conqueror then fell upon him to despatch him, and with one stroke of her beak laid open his skull.

CONSECRATION.-On Thursday morning last, that beautiful and spacious tabernacle of the Lord, St. Stephen's Church, situated in Tenth street, between Market and Chesnut, was conseerated by the Right Rev. Bishup White, assisted in the services by the Right Rev. Bishop Hobart, of New-York, the Rev. Dr Abercrombie, and the Rev. Mr. Montgomery. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Bishop Hobart.

FIRE .- On Thursday afternoon, about 4 o'clock, the Court-House at the S. W. corner of Fifth and Chesnut street, took fire in the roof, which was partly destroyed, along with the cupola which ornamented its top. Although the united efforts of a host of citizens and firemen were exerted to save the building, its walls and the wood work of the different rooms inside are much injured, so much so as will render it necessary to be entirely refitted before any business can be transacted there.— The papers and books belonging to the Mayor office suffered considerably from the water which fell in torrents through the roof. The fire is said to have originated from the bursting of one of the chimnies. It will be recollected that a similar disaster befel the court-house in Sixth street, about fourteen months ago.

A fire broke out on Saturday night last, about 11 o'clock, in a stable in Tenth street north of Chesnut, which burst forth with such force that the whole was enveloped in flames before it was discovered. By the exertions of the citizens and firemen the adjoining premises fortunately suffered little injury although they were exposed to the most imminent danger. We are requested by Mrs. Paschal, whose property on this occasion was miraculously preserved, to present her heart-felt thanks to her friends, and other individuals, who stepped forward to her assistance at such a trying immergency.

FIREMEN.

The Baltimore Morning Chronicle says, we are sorry to find in the Philadelphia papers, that those generous and disinterested itizens, who unite for the purpose of preserving the property of their neighbors from the destruction of the fiery element, are treated in that city as well as elsewhere, with unmerited coldness and neglect by the constituted authorities, when they are compelled to ask assistance from them, for the preservation of this laudable and patriotic

Charleston; he observed the Captain put way a large bundle of Southern Bank Notes which he was about to take for a merchant to get exchanged for l'astern paper. The young man stated that he was going passenger in the vessel, but just as they got under way, he was missed, and before the Pilot was discharged, it was found that Bank Notes to the amount of four thousand five hundred dollars had been taken. The capt, wrote by the Pilot to N. York to the merchant to whom the Notes belonged. Inquiry was made and it was | dies. ascertained that the young man had changed his name and gone off in the stage for Philadelphia. He was pursued and taken by one of the constables at a Hotel in this city. The most remarkable feature in the

MR. MATHEWS.

This celebrated disciple of Moonis made his debut on the Philadelphia stage on Monday last, amidst the rapturous plaudits of a very crowded house, a large and fashionable part of which had ome, predetermined to be exquisitely delighted nlus. A numerous body, however, felt themselver disappointed in the high expectations they had ormed of him in characters of general comedy and acknowledged he was not superior to our old favourites, Blisset, Jefferson, Burke, &c. But in the character of Mons. Morbies in the farce of Monsieur Tonson, his performance is certainly very superior. The delineation of the poor, tormented French emigrant is humourous and natural, and said, by those who are thought to be judges, ners of the ex-nobility, which differed muterially from the French dialect in vogue since the revolution. The public, however, have not yet had an op portunity of fully testing Mr. Mathews's merits they will probably meet with one this evening in the performance of the Actor of All Hork, which is supposed to be one of his masterpleces, and well calculated to display his talents in personating, in rapid succession, a variety of distinct characters

When Anti-Plugiarist informs us, where it would suit him to receive a line, it is not unlikely but that we can convince him of the injustice of the charges contained in his last note.

Distress in the West.

M UCH distress exists in this City—originating solely from the teeth; owing, in a great de-gree, to the manner in which the business of the Dentist has been conducted. If information had If information had been publicly gwen, many of the most distressing cases might have been prevented—timely applica-tion would have been made—the teeth would have been properly treated, and many persons who no ere almost destitute of teeth, would still enim them. But it has been so unfashionable to adver-tise, that no dentist of any celebrity would risk his popularity by giving publicity to information so much required. But these injurious prejudices have been partially dissipated and Williams now has the satisfaction of seeing advertisements and public information much more respected, and, he opes, in a few years, the complaints and lamen now heard so frequently,
